THE QUARTERLY JOURNAL or ECONOMICS JULY, 1898 WHY IS ECONOMICS NOT AN EVOLUTIONARY SCIENCE M. G. De Lapottge recently said, Anthropology is destined to revolutionize the political and the social sciences as radically as bacteriology has revolutionized the science of medicine. In so far as he speaks of economics, the eminent anthropologist is not alone in his conviction that the science stands in need of rehabilitation. His words convey a rebuke and an admonition, and in both respects he speaks the sense of many scientists in his own and related lines of inquiry. It may be taken as the consensus of those men who are doing the serious work of modern anthropology, ethnology, and psychology, as well as of those in the biological sciences proper, that economics is helplessly behind the times, and unable to handle its subject-matter in a way to entitle it to...
